What is a Finnish sauna?

A Finnish sauna is a type of sauna that harnesses the power of dry heat. Unlike steam rooms, also known as wet saunas, moisture and steam are kept at low levels in a Finnish sauna. In fact, the humidity is typically kept around 5-20% and the temperature is set around 80°C.

NOTE: Please discuss your preferences with our skilled masseurs, Kim or John. A customized massage, tailored to your specific needs, is their preferred approach to ensuring the best possible experience for you. This may also include a combination of the options listed below.

Relaxation massage

Just a moment for yourself. A relaxation massage has a calming effect because it uses gentle strokes. For complaints such as stress, tension, fatigue, or muscle pain, it can be a solution for you. Even without complaints, you can experience a wonderful relaxing massage and boost your immune system. Enjoy a full body massage for 60 minutes, where falling asleep is no exception.

Stress relief

This is a combination of relaxation, sport, and deep tissue massage. Smooth massage techniques will be used to relieve tension and warm up the muscle tissue. Then, deeper work will be performed on the muscles with a firm pressure to help relieve stress that has built up in the muscle. This process helps to relieve adhesions and other muscular tension.

Sports massage

A sports massage involves a firm massage, loosening underlying tissue and removing knots from your muscles. During a sports massage, the capillaries in the skin and muscles open further, causing a clear increase in blood flow.

Medical taping

Medical Taping is a taping technique used to support injury/trauma treatment. The elastic tape supports the muscular system without restricting movement.

Deep tissue massage

This massage targets muscle knots and stiffness, often caused by poor posture, stress, or prolonged tension. These issues can restrict blood and oxygen flow. The massage uses firm pressure with knuckles, fists, and elbows to release tension and restore balance by improving circulation. Note that soreness and muscle pain may occur afterwards, which is a normal response to the tissue work done. Your body's self-healing capacity is activated immediately after the treatment.

Energetic massage

The mind and body are interconnected; what affects one, affects the other. Energetic massage works on the body's energy flow and self-healing capacity. Emotions and pain can block or stagnate this flow. During the massage, you connect inwardly, experiencing what you need in the moment. Soft and deep techniques activate the parasympathetic nervous system, promoting rest and recovery.

Trigger point reset

Trigger Point Reset is a technique used to treat muscle spasms and stiff muscles by "triggering" them. Trigger points cause pain that radiates to other areas of the body. The therapist identifies the source and ensures that both the source and the referred pain are resolved.

Cupping therapy

Cupping is effective both physically and mentally. Emotional blockages can cause the connective tissue to become sticky, leading to tension, stress, and various ailments. Cupping helps detoxify the body, boosting energy and reducing inflammation. Using glass or silicone cups, the therapist applies suction, increasing blood, oxygen, and energy flow to the tissue. Redness may appear, with darker spots indicating waste buildup and the body's detox process.
